

Published in Young Post on 9th January 2013

Hurt workers want justice

The article “Left out on a limb” (Young Post, December 4) highlighted the troubles of injured workers on the mainland. About 12,000 workers are disabled in Shenzhen every year and the heartless attitude of the employers was shocking.

I think the central government should introduce a law requiring employers to assist those injured at work. Access for the disabled should be another main concern. Let's replace sympathy with action.

Chu Ho-yin,

Fanling Rhenish Church Secondary School